AN. ARCHAEOLOGICAL a FIND. a

There is probably no civilized city in the world where in the past there plot as in Paris.

Recently a workman engaged in razing a house in the Faubourg St. Germain on removing a square stone exposed the crown of a human head. As stone after stone was displaced a skeleton, dressed in the fashion of the time of Louis XII., was uncovered. The space in which it stood was just large enough to hold it. One side, opening into a large chamber, formed the door to the compartment, being a tall, narrow mirror, at the bottom of which were two wooden drawers flanked by candelabra, mirror, drawers and all moving together when the door swung. The architect at once sent information of the find to the Academy of History, and M. Andre Brosseau, the secretary, was dispatched to examine the skeleton. Brosseau was astonished to find that, though dressed as a man, the frame was that of a woman. The discovery filled out the missing links to a mystery of the time of Cardinal Richelieu that Brosseau had been long trying to solve, In Richellen's day dueling became so prevalent in France that the cardinal made it an offense punishable with death. Jules Beauchemin and Gaston Arnot, disregarding the edict, arranged to settle a dispute with rapters. Beauchemin was a noted fencer, who had often killed his man. Arnot was little more than a boy. Nevertheless Beauchemin was left dead on the field. The cardinal's spies, who had got wind of the matter, arrived on the ground only in time to see Arnot jump on a horse and leave the spot at a gallop. Running after him on foot, one of them selzed a borse by the way and followed him to the door of his home. As soon as they could gain admittance they entered and searched the bouse The young man was not to be found. There was no one there but servants. one of whom, being threatened, confessed that she bad seen her master run hurriedly upstairs and into his room. The cardinal's spy spent an hour vainly endeavoring to corner his man. Wast puzzled him was that there was no egress from the rear that he considered possible. Concluding that Arnot had got away by some hidden passage, the entrance to which was only to be found by one who knew the secret, he went to the cardinal and reported the facts. The same day a notice was posted in the streets of Paris offering a reward for Gaston Arnot, but the duellst was never taken nor was he ever again seen in France, though mysterious reports occasionally got out that be was serving with the army on the frontier. Now, all this was a matter of history with which the secretary of the academy had been familiar. If the skeleton found had been that of a man, a solution of the problem as to what had become of Gaston Arnot would have been found. As it was, the find only added to the mystery, for what was a woman doing in this secret space in the garb of a man? As to the house having been occupied by the Arnot family, that was uncertain. However, worn by the skeleton.

The story completed was in this sequence. wise: Jules Beauchemin was a suitor for the hand of Henrietta, aged twenty-four, sister of Gaston Arnot. She detested and refused him. Beauchemin not being able to take revenge upon a woman, while at cards one evening with Gaston, a boy of nineteen, deliberately accused him of cheating. This was tantamount to killing him, for Gaston, notwithstanding the cardinal's edict, could not live in Paris without having resented such an impuhis man.

Henrietta Arnot learned of this intended assassination of her brother. Inviting Gaston to drive with her, she took him to a farm belonging to her family on which lived a couple who were devoted to her. Gaston was inveigled into a room from which there was no egress, locked in and left in charge of the couple. In the early morning the sister, dressed in her brother's clothes, appeared on the dueling grounds. Just as the principals were about to take their places Henrietta paused, lifted some gauze from her face and said:

"M. Beauchemin, I am Henrietta Arnot. This quarrel is with me, not with my brother. I desire before we fight that you sign this paper, exonerating him from the charge you made against bim." Beauchamin, astoniahed, took the paper, signed it without reading it and handed it back to Henrietta. Then he threw down his sword. "En garde!" cried the girl flercely. Beauchamin refused. Henrietta made pass at him which, had he not nim bly stepped aside, would have killed him. He took up his sword, intending simply to parry her thrusts. This he fid successfully for some time, when either his foot slipped or he became through the body. It was Henrietta who was chased and who shut herself up In the secret closet. But whether she died from suffocation or because she could not open the door can never be known It was supposed at the time of the duel that she had fled with her brother,
